Perry Mason Goes Digital: Electronic Evidence in Family Law

Divorce lawyers have come a long way from the Perry Mason's world. They are no longer looking for the "lipstick on his collar." Today, they are hunting for his (or her) e-mails, text messages, ephemeral and encrypted communication and social media posts where clear-cut evidence of adultery so often exists. Ditto for evidence of Internet porn addictions and concealment or dissipation of marital assets, including cryptocurrencies! The list goes on and on – and the evidence formats are changing with technology. Here are some of the questions our presenters will answer:

- What can a digital forensic technologist retrieve from cell phones and computers? What is irretrievable?
- What happens if your client used spyware – or was the victim of its use?
- Is it ok to put a GPS on the car of a spouse or lover?
- What federal laws apply to e-evidence in divorce cases? How are the states handling these questions?
- What are the hottest apps seen in divorce cases – and what can you recover from them?

Our experts have been grilled by national networks, major newspapers – and even Oprah – on these issues. Come prepared with your own questions on how to legally procure and use electronic evidence in divorce cases!
